

What is Seta Accreditation?

SAQA defines accreditation as:

“The official certifications normally for a specified timeframe of an individual, a body or rather an establishment, having capability to perform a specific functionality in the quality assurance program put in place by the South African Qualifications Authority.”

Accreditation is granted to organizations who promote outcomes-based educational courses in line to the NQF subscribed unit standards as well as qualifications. It is presented to a service provider, normally for a time period of three years.

Accreditation should also be viewed as an audit procedure of the provider's quality system along with the training program which may be provided. It helps to ensure that training as well as assessments lead to the nationally recognized credits, and ultimately in the achievements of a formalised qualification.

Training centres and/or organisations with an existing quality management system, need to obtain accreditation with SETA in order to be able to provide accredited training.

Why do I need SETA Accreditation?

- Credibility for you in the SA skills development market.
- Training courses carry weight because they are accredited by an external body, namely SETA.
- The company receiving training from an accredited training provider, can claim back from the Skills Development Levy Fund.
- Organisations using accredited training companies earn BEE points.
- Accreditation indicates that your training organisation offers high-quality training and has excellent management principles and processes in place.
- It offers affordability for companies that use your training programmes – they can capture your training on their mandatory grant claim.

Why use us to get your SETA Accreditation?

All our facilitators have experienced SETA at first hand and therefore know exactly what's expected.

While you focus on your business, we will take the load of your shoulders to obtain a SETA accreditation for your training company.

Working hand in hand with the organisation before, we can comfortably supply required documents unique to each client. Our dedicated team not only assist in completing the required SETA documentation, but also conduct awareness workshops to familiarise all staff on QMS.

We can assist in maintaining the QMS by conducting internal audits on behalf of the organisation.

At Swift Skills Academy we have the skills, knowledge and expertise to make the process quick and as painless as possible.
